A Paradoxical Politics?
Religions, Poverty, & Re-Imagining Citizenship in a Globalizing World

Religions and Public Life Seminar Spring 2013
{REL 999.08, XTIANTHE 840} Tuesdays 5:30-8:00 pm

Understanding the paradoxes produced by the intersection of faith, politics and economics is a crucial yet neglected dimension to negotiating the impact of globalization locally, regionally and internationally on a wide range of issues such as public health, the environment, welfare provision, schooling, development aid, immigration, urban regeneration and security.

Facilitators:
Ebrahim Moosa, Dept. of Religion
Luke Bretherton, Divinity School

Featuring scholars from across Duke and beyond:
Jose Casanova, Georgetown University
Francis Cardinal George, OMI, Archbishop of Chicago
Susan Holman, Harvard University
Ruth Marshall, University of Toronto
Peter van der Veer, Max Planck Institute
J. Kameron Carter
Shalom Goldman
Bob Korstadt
Laurie Patton
Tim Profeta
Norman Wirzba

Sponsored by Trinity College of Arts & Sciences, the Divinity School, and the Kenan Institute for Ethics